A CARD.—My name having been mentioned in a discreditable manner in connection with the robbery of the Opera Saloon, I desire to state the facts of the case to the public at large. Mr. Brady, who was charged with carrying off property from the bar-room to which he was not entitled, asked me if he could leave his trunk and other baggage with me for a few days. I consented, and the trunk and several baskets of glassware and other articles were sent to my restaurant. I knew nothing of the robbery until morning, when, discovering the stolen goods upon my premuses, I sought Mr. Hamilton and told him of the circumstance. Thereupon Mr. Hamilton had a warrant issued for Brady's arrest. My object in publishing this card is to satisfy the public of my entire ignorance of the whole matter.

SOMETHING MORE OF THE STARRES MURDER CASE.—Messre. Davenport and Dovener, counsel for Carl Cartwright, charged with the murder of Levi Starkey, returned from Fairmont last night. The returned from Fairmont last night. The chief points in the trial of young Cart-wright, which resulted in his acquittal last Saturday, are doubtless familiar to the public. Cartwright is not more than eighteen years of age, and rather prepossessing in appearance. Throughout the trial it was evident that he had the sympathy of the spectators, and when the verdict of "not guilty" was announced the Court House rang with the cheers of the crowd. The trial lasted twenty days, the evidence in the case alone occupying fourteen days. One peculiar thing about
